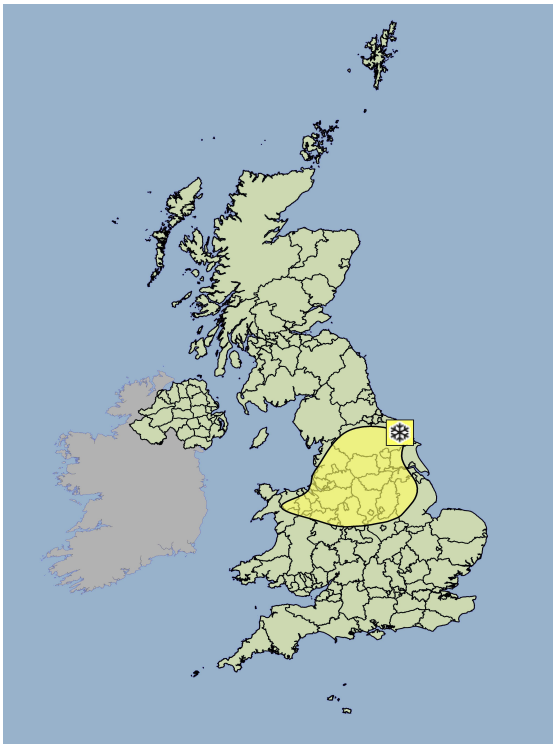
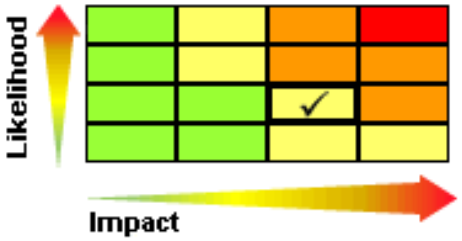
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Bands of rain spread from the south have turned to sleet and snow in the colder conditions further north. In particular, parts of the north east Midlands and South Yorkshire have seen a covering of snow overnight, even at low level, and there remains the risk of further accumulations within the warning area before the precipitation becomes increasingly fragmentary during the morning. Over higher ground such as the Pennines, North York Moors and the hills of North Wales, there may be total accumulations of over 10 cm before the snow eases.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 04:05 on Wed, 21st Jan 2015 until 12:00 on Wed, 21st Jan 2015

Further outbreaks of sleet and snow will affect parts of North Wales, the North Midlands and northern England this morning. Some areas have seen accumulations of 2-5 cm overnight, mostly above 150m but also at lower levels in places, and there may be further localised accumulations of several cm before the bands of snow become lighter and patchier later this morning. Total accumulations of 10 cm or more, including that already fallen, are possible over hills.

The public should be aware of the risk of disruption, particularly to transport. This update removes southern parts of the Midlands and Wales from the warning area, but also extends the area further north across northern England.

The public should be aware of the risk of disruption to transport.
